

Water and the Peace Process: Two Perspectives

Sep 1, 1992

In-Depth Reports

Arabs and Israelis alike recognize the critical importance of water to the peace process and the future of regional economic cooperation. It is estimated that between 100 and 150 million cubic meters of the Yarmuk River waters flow to the Jordan River and are lost, unused in the Dead Sea. It is expected that this water will be the subject of a tough confrontation in the course of the bilateral talks. With this in mind, The Washington Institute asked an Israeli and a Jordanian water expert to share outline their views in this special Policy Focus.
