A Syrian scholar and expatriate lays out the legacy of terror under the Assads and urges the Biden administration to prioritize the country’s sundry crises.

While March 12th marks fifty years of dictatorship and terror in Syria since Hafez al-Assad’s infamous coup d’etat, March 15th is the 10th anniversary of the Syrian revolution against the Assad regime. For most Syrians, since at least 2011, the very idea of home is shifting beneath their feet. A whole nation has gone forcibly homeless during the past ten years. Having fled my hometown, Damascus, in 2005 as a result of direct death threats from Bashar al-Assad, my family and I still continue to struggle to make sense of the idea of home...

Read the full article on the JMEPP website.
RECOMMENDED

BRIEF ANALYSIS

How Can Washington Constructively Engage Cairo on Human Rights?
Mar 19, 2021
Haisam Hassanein

BRIEF ANALYSIS

How Morocco's Diplomatic Efforts in Africa Are Shaping the Region
Mar 19, 2021
Samir Bennis

BRIEF ANALYSIS

The EastMed Gas and Philia Forums: Reimagining Cooperation in the Mediterranean
Mar 18, 2021
Rauf Baker