For Diplomacy to Work, Iran Must Understand That It Cannot Overplay Its Hand

by Dennis Ross
Apr 26, 2021

If there was any doubt that Iran wants and needs sanctions relief, it was removed on April 11. Rather than using what seemed like Israeli sabotage at Natanz as pretext to walk away from the talks in Vienna, the Iranians remain engaged with the British, French, Germans, Russians and Chinese, who are acting as mediators. There was no disruption of the talks.

Instead, the two working groups—tasked with negotiating a road map for the United States to lift its nuclear-related sanctions and for Iran to reverse its steps that violate the JCPOA limits—went to work...

Although the Biden administration strongly favors a diplomatic path to ensuring Iran never obtains a nuclear weapon, it needs to show that it will exercise other options if Tehran makes a viable deal impossible.

Read the full article on the Washington Post website.
RECOMMENDED

How Islamic State Ideology Contributes to Its Resilience
Jul 1, 2021
Pasar Sherko

A Strategy for Iraq: Guidelines for the Biden Administration
July 14, 2021, starting at 1:00 p.m. EDT
Jane Arraf,
Joey Hood,
Bilal Wahab

Uneasy State of Play Awaits New UN Envoy in Yemen
Jul 1, 2021
The Washington Institute seeks to advance a balanced and realistic understanding of American interests in the Middle East and to promote the policies that secure them.

The Institute is a 501(c)3 organization; all donations are tax-deductible.