

Policy Analysis /

Policy Alert

UAE-Israel Gas Deal (Finally) Finalized

by Simon Henderson

Sep 3, 2021

Also available in Arabic

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Simon Henderson

Simon Henderson is the Baker fellow and director of the Bernstein Program on Gulf and Energy Policy at The Washington Institute, specializing in energy matters and the conservative Arab states of the Persian Gulf.

Brief Analysis

Given ongoing environmental concerns over energy cooperation, the chances that the two partners will fully realize their commercial potential are still up in the air.

Since it was originally announced in April, the Israeli deal to sell 22 percent of the Tamar offshore natural gas field to the United Arab Emirates has taken four months to approve and resulted in a final price of $1.025 billion, or $75 million less than originally hoped. The stake's previous owner—Israeli firm Delek Drilling—was required to sell it due to a government push for increased competition in the power sector. The majority of the field is still owned by other Israeli companies; U.S. giant Chevron holds a 25 percent stake as well.

Located about 55 miles off the coast of Haifa, Tamar's gas flows by pipeline more than 100 miles south to a platform 13 miles off the coast of Ashkelon, where it is partially processed before being pumped to onshore facilities in Ashdod. After further processing, it enters Israel's gas grid. Some of this gas is used for domestic power plants; the rest goes to Jordanian industrial facilities or Egypt.

Financed by the UAE's Mubadala sovereign wealth fund, the completion of the Tamar deal suggests that Abu Dhabi has not seriously reconsidered the normalization efforts ushered in by last year's Abraham Accords—a significant concern after Israel's May showdown with Hamas. During the fighting, Hamas tried to attack the Tamar platform, which lies just a mile or two from Gaza's maritime zone.

Israeli domestic concerns about Emirati energy links persist, however. Environmental Protection Minister Tamar Zandberg and others have protested a plan for the UAE to transport petroleum products to Europe via a route that crosses Israel—namely, the pipeline that runs from the Red Sea port of Eilat to Ashkelon. In July, Zandberg’s ministry rejected an environmental risk survey it had requested from the Europe Asia Pipeline Company, the firm operating the line. A month later, on August 29, the pipe sprang a leak near Ashkelon, requiring authorities to replace a forty-foot section and remove 800 tons of contaminated earth. Zandberg and other senior officials visited the site on August 31, and her ministry subsequently announced a criminal investigation into what caused the leak.

Despite these problems, Israel and the UAE still look like natural partners for shaping a viable energy future given their similar-size populations and advanced high-tech sectors. For example, Mubadala described its investment in Tamar as complementing its “gas-based portfolio strategy in line with its energy transition goals.” Even so, the UAE has still hedged its bets by pursuing parallel strategies such as increasing its oil production, leading to speculation that it might leave OPEC so as not to be constrained by the cartel’s quotas.

Simon Henderson is the Baker Fellow and director of the Bernstein Program on Gulf and Energy Policy at The Washington Institute. ❖

View/Print Page as PDF

SHARE

EMAIL ALERTS

Sign Up

TO TOP

RECOMMENDED

Hezbollah’s Grip on Lebanon Is Weakening. Here’s How Washington Can Help.

Sep 20, 2021

Hanin Ghaddar

ARTICLES & TESTIMONY

Biden UN Speech Misunderstands the Point of ‘Forever Wars’—in the Mideast and

Elsewhere

Sep 20, 2021

Ido Levy

BRIEF ANALYSIS

Tweet Signals Major Upgrade in Relations Between U.S. Gulf Allies

Sep 20, 2021

Simon Henderson

TOPICS

Arab-Israeli Relations

Energy and Economics

Gulf and Energy Policy

REGIONS & COUNTRIES

Gulf States

Israel

STAY UP TO DATE

SIGN UP FOR EMAIL ALERTS

THE WASHINGTON INSTITUTE for Near East Policy

1111 19th Street NW - Suite 500
Washington D.C. 20036
Tel: 202-452-0650
Fax: 202-223-5364

Contact

Press Room

Subscribe

The Washington Institute seeks to advance a balanced and realistic understanding of American interests in the Middle East and to promote the policies that secure them.

The Institute is a 501(c)3 organization; all donations are tax-deductible.

About TWI /

Support the Institute

© 2021 All rights reserved.

Employment /

Privacy Policy /

Rights & Permissions