The question “Do you think it is going to be a cold winter?” has a double-edged meaning this year. Whether the temperature is above or below freezing, it looks increasingly likely that our ability to keep our homes and workplaces warm will be more limited. Adjusting the thermostat may not be enough. There could be actual shortages of fuel, as well as high prices. We are talking “likely,” rather than “certainly.” But with crude oil ending higher in price on Tuesday than it has since November 2014, everyone is on edge. We are intently watching what the Saudis and the Russians do...
RECOMMENDED

BRIEF ANALYSIS

Israeli Coalition Leaders Navigate Protests and Political Constraints
Jan 14, 2022
David Makovsky

BRIEF ANALYSIS

Bahrain Polls Shows Sharper Sectarian Split on Iran, Less Hope on Israel Peace
Jan 14, 2022
David Pollock

BRIEF ANALYSIS

How to Keep the Islamic State Down in 2022 and Beyond
Jan 13, 2022
Ido Levy
The Washington Institute seeks to advance a balanced and realistic understanding of American interests in the Middle East and to promote the policies that secure them.

The Institute is a 501(c)3 organization; all donations are tax-deductible.

About TWI  /  Support the Institute