Articles & Testimony

New data-rich graphics strikingly illustrate the growth in Tehran's oil revenue and China's outsize role in fueling this trend.

Iranian oil exports have increased more than threefold over the past three years, a consequence of relaxed U.S. sanctions enforcement and increased Chinese demand for heavily discounted crude. The following is a visual guide to this expansion and its implications for global energy markets, the Iranian regime's budget, and U.S. great power competition with China and Russia.
