

Solving the Challenges of Air Force Engagements in Irregular Warfare

Apr 29, 2010

Articles & Testimony

In order to position the Air Force for success in the modern security environment, while continuing to prepare for future conflict, a formal Irregular Warfare structure must be created. The U.S. Air Force is currently organized, trained, and equipped to conduct conventional warfare and has been forced to adjust to counter irregular threats in places like Vietnam, Somalia, Iraq, and Afghanistan throughout our history. These have been predominantly reactionary adjustments at the tactical level while maintaining a strategic eye on potential future conflicts. ...
