

Addressing the Scourge of Anti-Semitism in Europe

Matthew Levitt,

Fromer-Wexler Fellow and Director, Reinhard Program on Counterterrorism and Intelligence, The Washington Institute

Testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Subcommittee on Europe

December 12, 2023

Chairman Kean, Ranking Member Keating, distinguished committee members, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today to discuss the potential terrorist implications of the sharp rise in anti-Semitism in Europe.¹ Last week I visited Israel and saw firsthand the horrific results of the massacre Hamas carried out targeting Israeli communities on October 7. I bore witness to the remnants of Kfar Aza and the atrocities Hamas executed there. I was already familiar with the grotesque violence Hamas committed, but I felt the need to see it for myself. It was sickening. No wonder some Hamas officials have tried to distance themselves from the group's barbarity.² Israeli forces have since taken the fight to Hamas in the Gaza Strip, vowing to dismantle the group's governance project and deny it the ability to carry out such attacks targeting Israel in the future.

Hamas, for its part, has vowed to “repeat the October 7 attack, time and again, until Israel is annihilated.”³ In retrospect, it is clear that Hamas never prioritized attending to the needs of Palestinians in Gaza but rather leveraged control of the territory as part of a long game aimed at destroying Israel.⁴ This war, which Israel did not start and did not want, was the war Hamas always wanted.⁵ What Hamas could not have anticipated is that even after carrying out such a brutal attack, it would enjoy vocal support in pockets of anti-Semitic protests around the world.

There can be no doubt that the Hamas governance and terrorist infrastructure project in Gaza must be dismantled. Embedded within densely populated communities and using civilians as human shields, the group actively seeks to put Palestinians in harm's way in an effort to frustrate Israeli military progress and engender public support for Hamas and the Palestinian cause. As Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh said in the days after Israel began its attacks in Gaza that have resulted in thousands of deaths, "We are the ones who need this [Palestinian] blood, so it awakens within us the revolutionary spirit, so it awakens within us resolve, so it awakens within us the spirit of challenge, and [pushes us] to move forward."⁶

As Israel fights to secure the release of Israeli citizens taken hostage and to dismantle Hamas terrorist capabilities in Gaza, the images of the October 7 massacre have been replaced on news channels and our smartphone screens by images of the war in Gaza. Hamas started this war, and Israel must finish it while doing all it can to minimize civilian casualties; however, it should be noted that wars are always terrible, and in this case, one party to the war goes to great lengths not to protect civilians, but to expose them to violence. Hamas embeds itself within the civilian population—in and under hospitals, mosques, and schools—and uses civilians as human shields.

The Hamas attack and the war that followed have sparked protests around the world. Most of these people are protesting the war and casualties in Gaza, but some protest Israel's right to exist or laud Hamas and the October 7 attack. An alarming number have crossed from protesting Israeli actions to targeting Jews in general. In the weeks since October 7, countries around the world have seen a staggering rise in anti-Semitic incidents, ranging from the use of hate speech to threats and intimidation to the use of violence against Jewish or Israeli targets. In the United Kingdom, the Community Security Trust reported a 546 percent increase in anti-Semitic incidents in the period between October 7 and November 22 compared to the same period in 2022.⁷ Germany's Federal Association of Departments for Research and Information on Anti-Semitism recorded a total of 994 anti-Semitic incidents in the first 34 days of the war—resulting in an average of 29 incidents per day compared to the 2022 average of 7 per day.⁸ France has recorded 1,518 anti-Semitic incidents since October 7, resulting in 571 arrests—a staggering number when compared with the country's 2022 aggregate incident count of 436.⁹

According to information from a dataset maintained by my colleague at The Washington Institute, Dr. Aaron Zelin, 58 anti-Semitic and Islamophobic violent incidents and threats resulting in legal or police action have taken place around the world since October 7, including 13 in Europe. In Germany, for example, perpetrators firebombed a Berlin synagogue,¹⁰ attempted to ram a pro-Israel demonstration,¹¹ and attempted an arson attack on a synagogue in Erfurt.¹² As a result of this rise in anti-Semitism, Israel's National Security Council recently issued and upgraded travel warnings for over a dozen countries—including the United Kingdom, France, and Germany—warning Israeli citizens to “take additional precautions” while traveling there.¹³

Rise in the Use of Hate Speech and Symbols, Threats and Intimidation, and Violence

More than an increase in the overall prevalence of anti-Semitism, individuals, entities, and groups have used October 7 to galvanize their messages of hate, often resorting to the use of hate speech and symbols, threats and intimidation, and violence. A number of protesters have displayed overtly pro-Hamas or anti-Semitic symbolism at pro-Palestine protests. Two men are wanted by British police after sporting green Hamas headbands at a November 11 protest in London¹⁴; Metropolitan Police detained four individuals caught distributing “literature featuring a swastika inside a Star of David” at London's National March for Palestine on November 5¹⁵; and two women were photographed wearing photographs of paragliders taped to the backs of their jackets a week after Hamas's October 7 attack.¹⁶ On October 15, German police broke up a pro-Hamas celebration led by Samidoun,¹⁷ a front organization for the U.S.- and EU-designated terrorist group the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), which was banned from operating in the country less than a month later.¹⁸ The use of hate speech and anti-Semitic imagery not only perpetuates the virulent hatred that fueled Hamas's attack on Israel but can and does result in acts of real-world violence against Israeli and Jewish targets.

Anti-Semitic activity has also occurred across Europe outside of protests and demonstrations. For example, the morning of October 31, more than 200 blue Stars of David were found spray-painted across Paris and its surrounding suburbs.¹⁹ That incident was subsequently tied to a pro-Russia destabilization campaign, in a sign that rogue regimes are taking advantage of tensions surrounding the Hamas war to try to sow discord within democratic societies.²⁰ Elsewhere, the Jewish Cultural Centre in Ljubljana, Slovenia—home to a Holocaust museum and synagogue—was vandalized with a black swastika on November 16.²¹ Ilkka Salmi, the European Union Counter-Terrorism Coordinator, recently noted his concerns that the Gaza crisis could produce more polarization in Europe, “which could then, in turn, have an impact on terrorism and the overall security situation.”²²

Anti-Semitism in Europe also escalates beyond the use of derogatory speech and symbols to include more serious threats and use of outright violence. Italian rabbi Haim Fabrizio Cipriani was threatened on November 27 by a homeless man wielding a screwdriver who shouted, “Go away, you dirty Zionist fk,” potentially in response to his wearing a kippah on the streets of Genoa, Italy.²³ The Italian NGO Osservatorio Antisemitismo reported on November 13 that a mezuzah was stolen from the doorpost of a Jewish person’s apartment in Milan and a knife left in its place.²⁴ The use of hate symbols, threats, and violence often overlap; for example, a swastika was found spray-painted on a Jewish woman’s door after she was stabbed by a man in Lyon on November 3.²⁵

“Days of Rage” and Violent Protests

Some protesters have adopted radical pro-Palestinian symbols and slogans, including “from the river to the sea,” a phrase that by definition calls for the eradication of the state of Israel, not the creation of a Palestinian state living in peace with Israel.²⁶ Protesters at a London demonstration on November 11 chanted, “There is only one solution—intifada, revolution!” as they called for an “intifada from London to Gaza.”²⁷ Demonstrators in Washington, D.C. on November 4 insisted that Palestinians should resist Israel “by any means necessary,” a phrase that condones the use of terrorism, and branded signs depicting common anti-Semitic tropes such as “History repeats itself. Israel = Nazis.”²⁸

In the days following October 7, a number of Hamas and other terrorist leaders called for protests across the world. Khaled Mashal, a senior Hamas official currently residing in Qatar, stated, “[We must] head to the squares and streets of the Arab and Islamic world on Friday [October 13],” adding that “you all know your responsibility.”²⁹ This call for a global “day of rage” sparked widespread fear across the world, particularly in Jewish communities. A number of Jewish day schools in the United States closed their doors, and children of Israeli diplomats were warned not to attend public schools for their own safety.³⁰ Security concerns were echoed across Europe in the immediate aftermath of October 7 as a number of schools across London canceled classes on Mashal’s scheduled “day of rage,”³¹ France banned pro-Palestine protests in response to a rise in anti-Semitic incidents,³² and Jewish homes were graffitied with Stars of David in Berlin.³³ Authorities are concerned that stoking people’s emotions can lead to acts of terrorism. In the words of one European counterterrorism official, “I am very concerned about acts of terrorism against Jewish targets in Europe perpetrated by individuals or groups who sympathize with Hezbollah or Hamas or who are inspired by them but have no direct connection with them.”³⁴

Jihadist and Right-Wing Extremist Calls for Violence Post-October 7

The weeks since the October 7 attack have also seen an organized effort by violent extremist and terrorist organizations to foment violence and inspire terrorist attacks around the world. Mashal’s vocal support for October 7 and calls for mobilization were also echoed by other terrorist groups. For example, in late November, al-Qaeda’s media arm, al-Sahab, published an article calling on people in the Arab world and the West to carry out widespread civil disobedience in an effort to topple governments and “liberate Palestine.” The author called on Muslims to show strength, overthrow regional leaders, and punish the Western “Zio-crusaders” by “every means possible.”³⁵

A statement released by al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) three weeks after Hamas's assault on Israel went a step farther than calling for widespread protests: "We call on our Muslim brethren everywhere, in the West and the East, in Muslim and non-Muslim lands, to kill every Jew, American, and British citizen."³⁶ AQAP leader Sheikh Khalid Omar Batarfi described October 7 as an event that would "inspire the current generation as well as many to follow."³⁷ In the two weeks following Hamas's attack, al-Qaeda and Islamic State affiliates around the globe issued a series of statements calling for their followers to conduct terrorist attacks on Israeli, U.S., and Jewish targets.³⁸

Counterterrorism officials have taken notice. In his opening statement before the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs on October 31, FBI Director Christopher Wray discussed this threat, noting that the Islamic State has specifically called for "its followers to attack Jewish communities in the United States and Europe."³⁹ A statement from Israel's National Security Council confirmed this claim, noting that international jihadist groups like al-Qaeda and the Islamic State, as well as Iran and its network of proxies, have already made a number of attempts to "harm Israeli destinations and Jews around the world."⁴⁰

Islamist groups are by far not the only terrorist organizations to take advantage of October 7 to advocate for violence, hatred, and racism. Far-right neo-Nazi groups began creating anti-Semitic propaganda within hours of Hamas's incursion into Israel, drawing positive comparisons between Hamas and the Nazis and even creating a hybrid Palestinian-Nazi flag.⁴¹ "Accelerationists" have been using October 7 to radicalize and recruit new members who believe that Jews are an existential threat to white people.⁴² A security analysis conducted by the German Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution found that October 7 galvanized a wide variety of extremist groups based in Germany, from the far-left Samidoun (tied to the Palestinian Marxist terrorist group PFLP) to the far-right Der Dritte Weg (The Third Path), as groups from both ends of the ideological spectrum took to social media to spread disinformation and advocate for violent action.⁴³ Director Wray noted in his December 5 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee that the FBI is "working around the clock" to counter potential threats by the “rogues’ gallery” of terrorist organizations calling for attacks against American interests.⁴⁴ Based on my own conversations with counterterrorism officials, it is clear his counterparts in Europe are doing much the same.

Inspired Plots and Lone Actor Terrorism

The most pressing security challenge in the West to emerge from October 7 and the resulting war is the threat of inspired plots and lone actor terrorism. Testifying before the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, Director Wray noted that “the actions of Hamas and its allies will serve as an inspiration, the likes of which we haven’t seen since ISIS launched its so-called caliphate years ago.”⁴⁵ He later told the Senate Judiciary Committee that the FBI’s “top concern stems from lone offenders inspired by—or reacting to—the ongoing Israel-Hamas conflict, as they pose the most likely threat to Americans, especially Jewish, Muslim, and Arab-American communities in the United States.”⁴⁶ This concern is echoed by European security officials as well. EU Home Affairs Commissioner Ylva Johansson warned, “With the war between Israel and Hamas, and the polarization it causes in our society, with the upcoming holiday season, there is a huge risk of terrorist attacks in the European Union.”⁴⁷

There have already been several lone actor terrorist plots in Europe since October 7. On October 24, Belgian police arrested a twenty-three-year-old suspect who claimed he wanted to “die like a martyr by explosion” after his entire family was killed in Gaza.⁴⁸ Another man was arrested in Germany the same day in an unrelated case for allegedly plotting to ram a pro-Israel demonstration in Essen after joining the Islamic State in 2013 and serving five years in a German prison.⁴⁹

And while many people associate the tactic of inspiring lone actors or small groups to carry out acts of terrorism with Sunni jihadist groups like al-Qaeda and the Islamic State, Iran and its proxies have actively created online networks aimed at inspiring Shia jihadist attacks as well. In a report discussing the emergence of lone Shia actors in the United States, the National Counterterrorism Center described the occurrence of a “catalyzing event” as a risk factor for an increase in lone actor terrorist attacks.⁵⁰ October 7 certainly qualifies as such an event, resulting in a staggering increase in anti-Semitism around the globe and inspiring terrorist groups to mobilize their followers toward violence. In fact, a senior Israeli National Security Council official told reporters that “many terrorist attacks on Jewish and Israeli targets around the world” have already been thwarted since October 7.⁵¹

In June 2023, I coauthored a Washington Institute study with Moustafa Ayad—Executive Director for Africa, the Middle East, and Asia at the Institute for Strategic Dialogue—that dug into Iranian efforts to inspire Shia homegrown violent extremist attacks.⁵² We documented the existence of a digital ecosystem nurtured by the Iranian government, comprising the work of numerous state-run media outlets and Middle East militias (published in many languages) that have long circumvented efforts to moderate their content, openly attacked regime opponents, and seeded Tehran-approved tropes across a range of platforms. One such “volunteer-run” network has managed twenty websites supportive of Iran, its proxies, its clerical leadership, and Iran-linked clerics in Pakistan, and is building archives, news sites, and chat forums. Ten of the sites are currently functional and accessible, while the other ten are inaccessible or defunct. One of its most prominent websites outlines its “beliefs” via a thirteen-point statement in the “About Us” section. One of the points reads: “We strongly and categorically oppose, condemn, and are enemies of every brand of ‘Islam’ that is promoted and spread by the United States of America and the United Kingdom.” The site has 238 pages of digital posters asserting, among other things, that the United States and Britain have “cultivated terrorism” and that Europe helped “nurture” Islamic State foreign fighters. The site also includes several professionally edited videos about Qasem Soleimani.⁵³ The resulting echo chambers, spanning digital platforms, champion martyrdom as noble and theologically sanctioned and could potentially precipitate real-world harm—especially in the wake of the October 7 attack and the war that followed.

Conclusion

Recent events have led counterterrorism analysts to assess the potential for the October 7 Hamas attack and the war that followed to usher in a new wave of international terrorist threats to the West.⁵⁴ In the words of EU Counter-Terrorism Coordinator Ilkka Salmi, “What has happened in Israel [on October 7] will have an impact on the security situation also in Europe. We have to stay vigilant.”⁵⁵ This is especially true given the staggering spike in anti-Semitism in Europe and around the world, as Salmi goes on to note: “I also think that there is a possibility that pro-Palestinian demonstrations, notably unauthorized ones, could give rise to violence against real or perceived supporters of Israel, including Jewish citizens and their institutions. E.U. Member States governments should do all they can to protect European Jews from such violence.”⁵⁶
